Microsoft's very own reporting shows a 34% year-on-year increase in water consumption for 2022, and with its rapid investment in AI in recent months, this is a figure that could grow even further by the time Redmond releases its next report. Google also noted a 22% increase in its water consumption for 2022, similar to the year prior to that, too, but up from 10% for 2020.

As sea levels rise with global warming, is there a reason they can't use sea water to cool these server farms, in a way that isn't just building them in the ocean and heating it further. I'm not saying it will help global warming or anything but makes more sense than them using fresh water for this.

Microsoft had a prototype undersea data center once. Don't know what happened to it.
