

Why does Google lie about Gemini's power when they don't even have to, since if the benchmarks are not faked, they have the best AI model in the world?

Posted by u/Happysedits • 0 points • 1 comments

- I guess they can afford to get reputation damage from the experts.
- They created an enormous tsunami wave throughout the society signaling that they're now the best top player in the AI world dethroning OpenAI and that's probably what's going to be remembered.
- Maybe it's not failed marketing, but 69D galaxybrained chess social engineering marketing to assert dominance in the public's eyes.
- This also attracts investors.
- Maybe it's also to accelerate regulatory capture.
- And with good timing the industry also wants a stable company to be economically and technologically dependent upon and less of unstable almost implosion like what happened in OpenAI.

Comments

u/chlebseby • 2 points • 2023-12-07 20:38 UTC

Google lied? what?