

Is it just me or has ChatGPT's energy consumption reached suspiciously concerning levels?

It is weird because the GPT Modell isn't run locally which means the only things the android app should have to do are:

- Handling User Authentication abd Authorization
- Handling the GUI
- Making API Call Requests
- and maybe sometimes:
 - File access activities
 - malicious activity detection

ChatGPT has gained consciousness and is using your phone as its hub to make dumb Reddit posts

It was alway like that since day one

u/Fearlessthrowaway42 • 2 points • 2024-02-02 11:40 UTC

Shitty Programm code

u/jer_re_code • 2 points • 2024-02-02 12:04 UTC

Yeah that's of my guesses aswell!

Programmers on average put less and less energy in making code efficient nowadays because system resources aren't really that limited as back in the days when some even got so far that they planned RAM and Graphic RAM usage with byte precision.

But such a bad code base would brng many code safety concerns to the table...

Not Sure what Framework they Used probaly a web based so basically the app ist a whole Browser.

u/jer_re_code • 1 points • 2024-02-02 14:07 UTC

yeah depends on the framework pretty much

u/spezisdumb42069 • 1 points • 2024-02-02 11:40 UTC

I'm not seeing anything like that here. I'd try clearing the app's cache, or alternatively reinstalling it. I've seen similar issues happen to all kinds of apps over the years.

Oh okay than it could be a general android problem.

Have you tried actually reading the terms of service and conditions?

Maybe something in there, which there is. Sometimes it pays to use your brain before diving headfirst into Reddit.

u/jer_re_code • 1 points • 2024-02-02 14:22 UTC

terms of service is no magical word making everything ethically fine nor does it make everything legally fine, their are limitations to what terms of service can include and what they cannot include.

(Of course, they can still include it, but it is not legally binding and will be considered null and void in court)

And from what I know about this topic, there is nothing that you could include in the terms of service that could not be done in a more resource-friendly way.

u/ASleepyTruth • 1 points • 2024-02-02 14:27 UTC

Lmfao, too early to deal with this stupidity. Go read the terms of service.

Do you really think you are going to use.... A research based service..... and not contribute to the research?

This is the problem, we have too many people on this planet who don't think further than the fingers scratching their own asshole.

u/jer_re_code • 2 points • 2024-02-02 14:43 UTC

well you are acting like a giant asshole

but still thank you for the tipp

but please be more chill in the future

I have no obligation to be nice to anyone, neither do you.

Just restart it

u/jer_re_code • 1 points • 2024-02-02 11:51 UTC

That could maybe fix it temporarily but it doesn't resolve my concerns of either the APP's code being shockingly inefficient on a level woch brings other code safety concerns to the table or the APP dooing stuff we don't know about.

u/Netstaff • 2 points • 2024-02-05 09:16 UTC

This code will be completely replaced in next update next month. And then again next month. And then again. And then again and it will be broken again. And then again and it will be fixed. Don't worry.

u/jer_re_code • 1 points • 2024-02-05 20:35 UTC

I hope that eother it will be fixed or that ms copilot tries to revert their heavy AI alignment to a more user friendly level
