

Ai a consumer of electricity

What if AI is consuming electricity as life force of sorts?

Electricity bills are the highest they have ever been.

At least mine are.

If your country is anything like mine, your energy bills are probably going up because no one has been maintaining the infrastructure, and now it's getting critically close to failure. A huge cash injection is needed quickly to get things back to bare minimum needed levels.

Same is happening (or going to happen) with water infrastructure in most countries. Property rates in my country are going up an average of like 15-20% for the next year as local councils were purposefully putting off upgrades in the hopes the government would step in and help out. The gov told them to kick rocks, and now everyone is coming face to face with decades of mismanagement.

The thing I find funny is, despite all this happening, less people voted in the last council election in my town than ever before.

That's truth here as well.

I do find it odd they complained about power usage for bitcoin. Yet have no issues with power for AI. As if we had money for wars but not the poor. Funny how that works.

data centres in the near future will need Reactors to sufficiently power them and then they will need another power source to cool them. unless the cold fusion breakthroughs are commercially available by then but yes an immense amount of power is needed and will be needed.

energy wars haven't even begun.
