

How much water does a character.ai message waste?

Posted by u/Garys_MODDER • 0 points • 4 comments

I recently quit the site after learning about the horrible effects generative ai has on the environment. I was already against ai generated images & video.

But once learning of the enviornmental effect even a single chatgpt message uses I quit chatgpt entirely and I, I wonder if c.ai's is any more water friendly?

I was recently considering using the site again, but I want to make sure that the site I am using will not have as much of a major impact on the enviornment as chatGPT and other major AI's, it should considering it's much smaller messages.

=====

How can water be wasted?

GPT for example uses fresh water for their cooling centers and spend about 500ml of water per 5 messages (If you are in the United States, if outside it could be as far as 1500ml) now that does not seem like a lot, but it is when you consider it has over 100million daily users The main issue is that we are using fresh water faster than it can be remade. If we keep going like this we will have a major water shortage by 2048.

=====

So, tl;dr.

How big is the water waste for character.ai? And if it is big are there any plans to have a less intense effect on the enviornment?

Comments

u/N000fy • 1 points • 2025-01-11 21:43 UTC

I was curious abt this to lol sadly cant find anything about it online :(

u/[deleted] • 1 points • 2024-09-29 20:03 UTC

[removed]

u/[deleted] • 1 points • 2024-07-16 14:35 UTC

[removed]

u/antilolivigilante • 2 points • 2024-07-16 03:09 UTC

I'm ignorant on the subject so forgive me if this is a stupid question, why can't they use something other than fresh water? Is tap water somehow inferior as a cooling liquid? What about actual coolant like air conditioners use?

u/[deleted] • 1 points • 2024-11-29 13:14 UTC

[removed]

u/Garys_MODDER • 1 points • 2024-07-16 09:08 UTC

I think there are cooling centers in Finland for example that use sea-water. My guess is that it is just cheaper, and most corporations will always prefer profit over long term impact. Do not quote me on this guess however.

u/antilolivigilante • 1 points • 2024-07-16 12:05 UTC

That makes sense, late stage unregulated capitalism strikes again 🤔