

What do Ai artists think of the pollution?

Posted by u/princeDaken • 0 points • 32 comments

Asking as a genuine question I've heard that Ai generation causes damage to the environment so I'm curious how does that make all you pro Ai people feel?

Why do all these AI-skeptical post start with "I've heard" or "it seems"?

"Your honor, some say this is my client. Well, I gather he's accused of something, but I hear this isn't true! The defense rests."

I was asking because I simply have heard and can't guarantee it's true that's part of why I was asking

What pollution?

I feel just fine, it's more ecological than gaming.

Besides that, power is fungible. A watt is a watt whether it came from gas or solar. So build more solar, and problem solved.

They don't care. They also deny it, too and think they know more than the people that actually work with and build A.I.

Why dont you ever bring any proof if you're so correct? I keep asking antis for proof on this environment argument and never get any that shows using AI is causing relevant damage.

This entire post and subreddit is proof. Every comment is literally doing anything but answering the question. Can't even answer a simple yes or no without a graph trying to defend yourself.

>Can't even answer a simple yes or no without a graph trying to defend yourself.

"How dare you bring data into a conversation" - an insult to corvids

Says the person that needs A.I to formulate thoughts for them.

If AI is causing the level of environmental harm you claim, surely you can cite something concrete, actual studies, reports, anything beyond vague hand-waving. Otherwise, it just sounds like another excuse to avoid answering the question.

So show us some proof it is really bad compared to other industries.
