

Best Friend Being Hypocritical Regarding the Environmental Harms of AI

Posted by u/Radiant-3272 • 0 points • 1 comments

So I (20) have had multiple discussions regarding ai with my best friend (ill just call him K), and we have both settled on the side of being anti ai, however I do agree there are some benefits in rare cases but I now wouldn't accept the use of ai now, given the environmental consequences.

The main issue here is the way K brings up the environmental harm ai causes as his main defense for why ai is bad (which i fully agree with). HOWEVER, I believe K using this defense isn't very reliable due to his over use of plastic water bottles (and I mean like 12 empties on his bedside table a lot, new one every day etc) that are VERY harmful to the environment (even if put into recycling, there is still a large portion of it that either ends up in landfills or is incinerated, not to mention the air pollution that would cause).

I know I sound like a "I speak for the trees" environmental control freak or whatever but idk I just get the ick at the hypocriticalness of it all. And I feel like if I bring it up to him he'll get defensive because he tends to be that way.

Please give me advice on what to do or say and let me know if I'm wrong or if I'm overthinking! <3

Comments

u/Personal_Win_4127 • 1 points • 2025-04-12 18:06 UTC

The point is valid, but using his personal failings isn't a means of effectively debating the strength of your argument.

u/Radiant-3272 • 1 points • 2025-04-13 15:14 UTC

thank you for your feedback, I really appreciate it! I'll keep that in mind