

If AI hurts the environment, why is it everywhere?

Posted by u/ButterscotchSpare738 • 0 points • 61 comments

All I've heard recently is how AI hurts the environment by using tons of water. But then how come so many companies are using it as little "helpers" on their websites? Also Google uses it as the first thing that pops up!

I've wanted to make a conscious effort to not use AI so much to limit the destruction it may have on the planet but AI keeps getting shoved in my face against my will.

Why is it being so commonly used even in places it doesn't need to be? What is the logic? Can anyone else relate to not wanting to use it but being forced to anyways?

Comments

u/MassiveSubtlety • 1 points • 2025-05-19 20:04 UTC

If climate change is so bad, why are we still eating meat and dairy?

Because we're not a very smart species.

u/AA11097 • 1 points • 2025-05-19 12:49 UTC

Again with the AI environment thing?

Whoever said that, and I don't care who says that, is a lazy hypocrite. Yes, AI destroys the environment, but let's compare it to a normal human being first of all. A human needs tons of water too. To stay hydrated, to stay clean, to stay freaking alive. Plus, a human needs a lot of electricity to light up their home. And basically live plus cars destroy the environment no one cancels them. Google does the same thing, and no one cancels them. Fueling stations, airports, airplanes, industries—everything—and still no one cancels these. You know why? Because you all need them. Y'all can't live without a car. Y'all can't live without electricity. Y'all would die if water wasn't around. And now when generative AI does the same thing, we go ahead and cancel it? That's not liking the environment. That's just being hypocritical.