

"People are dumb... Why do they think AI destroys the environment? It doesn't make any sense."

Bonus points for the last person chiming in to remind us that human frivolities like food must be sacrificed for the non-thinking LLM bots. How close are AI bros to declaring people in nursing homes to be less important than generating 5-titted women?

I think that last comment has a point. I hate the AI-shitification of the internet as much as the next person, but if your main issue with it is the environmental impact it's morally inconsistent to not adopt veganism. Meat is hugely wasteful from an ecological point of view.

Btw, in case you guys end up in an argument about this later: they like to point to the energy consumption of prompts to dismiss the argument, but they're moving the goalposts when they do this.

The real energy consumption lies in the training of these LLMs, which is something they need to do constantly in order to maintain even vague relevance on current information.

There's a couple extra issues with their attempt to compare just prompting to everything else a person does too:

1. I saw somebody compare prompting to watching Netflix. What they don't account for, is that Netflix is designed to be a "second screen experience." So the comparison isn't prompting vs Netflix. It's Netflix plus prompting vs just Netflix.

(This probably applies to most things they try to compare prompting to...)

2. While this stuff was still fresh on my mind, I saw a 404 Media report on how content farms are generating hyper-specific slop to reach every possible micro-demographic. For example, if you enjoy a certain sports team, Facebook might serve you endless fake articles about how the team's coach volunteered in the Texas flood.

Maybe these AI cultists should be place in rehabilitation centers and forced to create solar panels to undo the environmental damage they do.

Maybe don't go around promoting slavery...

u/trippod0 • 1 points • 2025-07-27 03:34 UTC

Promoting slavery AND concentration camps! 🤔

They are so uneducated.

Peak ignorance.
