

Will Ai really take our water? Will we have water in the future?

I keep hearing that our water will run out because of how much water Ai uses. I need clarification. Please tell me we'll have drinking water for future generations. 🥺🥺🥺🥺🥺🥺

Bruh AI don't literally consume water, Tf they gonna do with H2O, it's used as a coolant to cool the servers down, like how fluid in Ac is used as a Way of transferring heat out.

Also all the servers that are running the internet is "consuming" water from YouTube to Google, their servers need something to cool them down.

[ChatGPT and similar AIs don't really use all that much water and electricity.]
(<https://andymasley.substack.com/p/a-cheat-sheet-for-conversations-about>) But it's hard to say about future AI. If we keep improving it until it's smarter than humans, and decides it would rather use water for more data centers than for humans, it's not like we could do anything about it.

Nothing ever happens, we're going to be mostly fine

Water isn't literally a limited resource. It's replenished by the water cycle. But it is a scarce resource in that there's not an infinite amount of fresh, cool water available for cheap in every location.

The main problem with water access is climate change. AI uses power so it's a component of that but climate change long predates AI and AI isn't the main problem. If you want to ensure water access, focus on climate change first.

It's always climate change

We seem to be running out anyway...
