

r/antiai

If you are anti-ai for the environment, you're a hypocrite if you're not at least vegetarian

Posted by u/Immediate_Extreme911 • • 0 points • 68 comments

This doesn't include people with conditions preventing them from safely transitioning to veganism, prioritizing your health and safety is important!

<https://foodpolicyforthought.com/2013/02/09/what-are-a-hamburgers-real-ingredients/>

<https://www.npr.org/sections/thesalt/2012/06/27/155527365/visualizing-a-nation-of-meat-eaters>

Many people say they are against Generative AI particularly because of its negative impacts to the environment (amount of fresh water being consumed)

Now, producing most meat products can do the same amount, if not more damage. So, if these issues are important to you, why aren't you vegetarian or vegan yet? (If you are already, no need to answer!)

Also, for clarification... I'm anti-ai myself and transitioning to veganism slowly (I have some health issues myself that I need to handle first)

Comments

u/gravyrdfila2 • 1 points • 2026-04-08 18:28 UTC

67

u/Gove80 • 1 points • 2025-09-14 11:47 UTC

just as i expected, the comments are bunch of excuses is it that hard to admit two things,

1. that you guys hate ai more than you care about the environment

2. the fact that 1 makes you a hypocrite, in that regard

u/TougherThanAsimov • 0 points • 2025-08-21 21:05 UTC

To be fair, you are using the worst example of resource efficiency when it comes to meat production. Yes, cattle have a feed conversion ratio of... I think twelve pounds of feed to a pound of meat. And yes, that's live weight meaning that the numbers get worse for dressed carcass weight. But with chicken, broilers go down to an FCR of around two for live weight.