

Do people who say "ai harms the environment" actually CARE for the environment?

They're always sat there arguing online all day, and polluting the environment by doing so. "Well ai deos more somehow" So? Why should it be a competition. You don't need tiktok or reddit, yet you're still on it anyway. It goes both ways. If they wanted to do something about the environment, then they'd limit their screentime, and actually do something that helps the cause. Rather then arguing all day and convincing no one. 🤔 Also, you physical cannot use up water. Idk where they got that from. They clearly have no idea what they're on about, and it shows.

Whether they care isn't really relevant. What matters is whether it makes sense. To me, this falls in the 'paper straws' category. It makes people think they're doing something when they're not. The water cooling for data centers is pretty much irrelevant in the grand scheme of things, unless we're talking about an area where we're taking it away from other users. And that's not an environmental issue, it's a social one.

Simply put No.

One person on Wplace that I got on for basically arguing AI hurts the environment. Well in reality he was being disingenuous saying it accelerated global warming and I knew what angle he was trying.

While yes any carbon emission is gonna do that AI is a minor proponent of the global carbon emissions and saying it does is using a kernel of truth to pose as a mountain of false hood and I called him out while another cited how much meat contributes to it, and he actually said he knew...

I then called him out citing they were still being disingenuous and I didn't really respond after that... Not worth my time debating it and using my pixels that are better placed in art instead of idiots or bad faith actors in the debate.

Although the majority clearly just use it as an excuse, I have seen a few antis who are vegans or who actually care. There's like 99% who are just saying it to sound ethical, and 1% who actually practice what they preach.
