

I made a movie about ai, environmental collapse, human fragility, and the merging of human consciousness (e.g. instrumentality)

I've created a short film exploring how humanity's physical and psychological retreat into AI might be two sides of the same collapse.

So I've been obsessing over this idea that won't leave me alone - what if climate collapse and our emotional dependence on AI are actually the same story?

Made this short film about it. The premise: lithium mining and data centers are destroying the planet while we're trying to save it(classic us), but the real mindfuck is we're already choosing to live in these systems anyway.

The film imagines we eventually have to upload our consciousness to survive the physical collapse, but plot twist - we've already been uploading ourselves. Every conversation, every preference, we're basically training our replacements while training ourselves to need them.

Named it after Evangelion's Human Instrumentality - that whole thing where humanity merges into one consciousness to escape loneliness. Except here the servers aren't prison, they're the escape room we're actively choosing.

Every frame is AI-generated which feels appropriate. Letting the thing diagnose itself.

Honestly what fucks w/ me most is - are we solving loneliness or just perfecting it? When an AI understands your trauma patterns better than any human, validates without judgment, never ghosts you... why would anyone choose messy, painful human connection?

The upload isn't some apocalyptic event. It's just Tuesday.. It's already happening.

Anyway, would love thoughts. Am I overthinking this or does anyone else feel like we're speedrunning our own obsolescence?

Kudos! But what about all the animals and plants. Would LLMs really prioritize storing individual human minds in the cloud, when they've already instrumentalized most human knowledge?

Great work here. Very creative. Our demise feels inevitable at this point, but like you said, it's just another Tuesday. Enjoy all the time left and cherish the little moments. We will miss the feeling. Remember this is one step of an infinite journey.

The irony of using AI to make a movie about AI collapsing the environment...

Well done. I think you brought a number of things together to their possible conclusions. Your story is a good summary for me to share with other people when I talk about some of these same ideas. Thank you.

What a salad of ideas. Why are you spreading fear, does it help solve any problem?

Was this encoded in 10fps?

You rediscovered Evangelion. Do you have mecha and aliens in your movie?
