

Is using character ai harmful to the environment?

Posted by u/Foreign_Patience2541 • • 0 points • 1 comments

Well, you know, as far as I know, generative AI is harmful to the environment, so I wanted to make sure that I shouldn't have deleted it or not.

Although, probably, in any case, for good reason...

Comments

u/GoodSundae513 • 1 points • 2025-12-18 20:41 UTC

Yes, but it's tenfold worse to participate in fast fashion or eat meat. This is what I've found from my research and browsing reddit threads of environmentalists. Despite it all it's nowhere near the worst thing for the environment when it comes to water use.

The worst aspect is the building of data centers and the initial training of the models, that's what uses most water, individual use is a blip. You could say by us supporting AI we encourage the building of more data centers. But I also think rp is such a tiny part of AI use that even if we all quit they wouldn't gaf and keep building...

So the answer is yes but you probably do worse things daily to the environment lol take it as you will. I personally know fast fashion is one of the worst things that consume most resources and I still participate. Not excessively but you know... most of us are self serving like this to an extent

u/Dax2412 • 2 points • 2025-12-18 20:38 UTC

Yes, it's harmful to the environment because it's still generative AI. In fact, the raise in popularity of generative AI has started to cause serious environmental issues, job issues, power issues, and computer manufacturing issues. It's literally being pushed on us by what seems like every major company, from TV ads to our phones in an unprecedented scale, which means more and more people are using generative AI. I still use Character AI despite all these issues because overall, I'm a selfish person that prioritizes my comfort and enjoyment over others, just like a majority of other human beings do. I enjoy role playing stories with bots I create and will continue to do so, even though I know I'm contributing to the AI issue. That's a personal decision that I have to live with. Whether you continue to use Character AI or not is up to you, but you have to be honest with yourself on why you're using it despite the harm it causes.