

Why do you use ai? Can you be convinced to use environment-friendly alternatives?

Every prompt and question uses water and energy that negatively affects the planet. Here's what you can do to help.

Ecosia is a search engine that plants a tree with every search, im using it now to find information. Ecosia still uses AI but not as harshly as other search engines. By going to settings you can turn off AI search results. That way, AI isn't being used while you're also contributing to reforestation.

Start, Eco-bricking, Saving water, Turning off electricity, Reusing Jars, bags, Bottles etc. Donate clothes and items, Recycle

Stop, Funding harmful corporations, Using AI (ofc) fast fashion(shein, Temu) Littering.

We only have one Earth, let's make it better together centers' global annual water consumption is set to reach 1,068 billion liters by 2028, an estimate 11 times higher than last year's projection. For context, each individual American uses roughly 243,174 liters (64,240 gallons) a year.

No way the tree per search thing is true.

see for yourself idk

Ecosia is largely a feel-good move for the average user, since individual choices like this don't meaningfully affect the infrastructure AI runs on, which extends well beyond AI itself. If someone truly cares about environmental impact at that scale, the pressure needs to be on corporations to optimize, regulate, and grow responsibly, because collective leverage is where influence actually exists.

I know that and i'm not arguing against that, i'm just saying many individuals that don't run corporations, still contribute to begin impacts on our planet. Like i said before, i am giving alternatives to those who would consider it, thanks for your input

So... should I stop using Google, Netflix, cloud backups, and email too?

That's your decision? I'm providing alternatives that people may consider using Companies have been rampantly burning through all the planets resources as long as they've been able to do so. AI's use of natural resources is no different than any other predatory practice already long present.

Start with the source of the issue, not the technology.

And start with the companies that use the vast majority of the resources, not the people who's habits are a symptom of the cancer already present.

Simply giving suggestions that are beneficial!

You're literally using data centers owning a phone. Every app used. Your service provider. Android/apple use data centers. You're on reddit which has servers and is legally using your data and everything you post and interact here to train ai.

You have no idea what you're talking about. Go be Amish in the woods. I bet you eat almonds.

Thank you i know, but spreading a little awareness just helps to an extent, im so sorry i didn't know that was such an issue for you :(

Water can't be created or destroyed. Evaporation isn't fission, it rains back down. If you're just talking about usable water in California, I'm not in California so why would I care at all?

Something that is a real issue is children digging cobalt by hands in mines to power smart phones. Look that up. If you want to fight actual suffering not pretend problems that's a good place to start.

ok buddy

The constant virtue signaling is an issue, yes. Its preachy and condescending, nobody wants to be talked down to by hypocrites.
