AI isn't just wasting water.

In case you don't want to read the whole article, here's a short summary:

Deepfakes of three women were used to create AI "influencers" that garnered millions of views.

Then, viewers had an option to undress them outside of social platforms, which allowed AI users to profit of someone else's body.

All three sued the artificial intelligence company.

1 more reason I feel good about my faceless online presence

u/TheDorkyDane • 7 points • 2026-01-29 20:23 UTC

Yeah.

I actually made this argument the other day, shouldn't photo realistic A.I. be categorised as deep fakes, which would make them illegal

Already now... and NO political discussions here guys, just from a pure, removed, objective point of view. We're not talking about ANY specific incident here, overall. Okay? Good.

We've seen plenty of A.I. being used to tweak images or just make fake images to make up false narratives... that's literally using deep fakes to cause mass hysteria and potential violence right?

And not just that, it is putting actual real footage into question as it can now be accused of being a.i.

So we can literally not trust any photos or videos anymore

And that was already hard as photoshop and malicious editing was already a thing.

As well as using old photos claiming they are from current events has been used, and is bad.

Now though where it's so easy to make small tweaks, such as adding or removing a gun from a person's hand in the presented footage is REALLY dangerous, and we should call it deep fake technology... which it is... and apply the law as written.

And well... deep fakes are already illegal...

AI bros are still crying that Grok is censored. a big margin of AI bros used it to edit people to be nude. Now they are saying how it's woke and censored.

No matter what AI bros say, they can't deny the fact that those kinds of people lurk among them.

Weren't they using it to make child pornography?

u/Crafty_Church_Kid • 3 points • 2026-01-29 23:04 UTC

yep - hence the Internet Watch Foundation sent urgent alerts to Twitter, and the UK almost banned the entire platform until Twitter eventually stopped letting people making deepfakes with AI

u/Anima_Analysis • 3 points • 2026-01-29 23:04 UTC

Fucking insane.

u/Crafty_Church_Kid • 3 points • 2026-01-29 23:10 UTC

Yep - and I shit you not, people lost their collective minds when our government announced their plans to ban Twitter if they didn't sort their AI out, saying the UK hated free speech and was a dictatorship - simply because the government didn't want people to be able to use a platform that allowed people to easily make AI generated kiddy porn.

The USA even threatened SANCTIONS over this.

Christ. I am an artistic freedom extremist. I think people should be allowed to make art of anything.

But, having an AI make realistic looking porn of children is beyond too far. Especially since those images have to be based on images in Groks data bank of real life children.

Elon Musk only put a stop to it because he had to from all the pressure he was getting.

Had the issue been left alone, it would still be a problem. He even joked about it in the beginning.

"Look guys, I edited myself in a bikini using Grok, so it's fine." Absolute clown behavior.

That's true, he didn't even stop it for the mother of one of his children when she complained about it.

It's hardly a wonder why some of his own children want nothing to do with him.

Of course, being able to edit other people's work without consent is why artists are jumping over to alternatives.

From what I understand the National Centre for Missing and Exploited Children has a CSAM database that is used by social media

platforms
and law enforcement
to identify new uploads
and new material.
Twitter has access to it
for the purpose of moderation
so you don't have to subject
people to the material
in order to check and remove it.

I shudder to think that Grok was given access to this database
too.

Millions of ai bros must goon to CONSENTUAL MEDIA WITH ADULTS

u/Any_Kaleidoscope8717 • 10 points • 2026-01-29 21:32 UTC

Damn! And there's only a couple of centuries worth of consensual porn available out there! Often for free!! What ever will they do without non-consensual slop-porn?!

u/RedditUser000aaa • 12 points • 2026-01-29 20:21 UTC

a large margin of AI bros hate consent. That's why they used Grok to strip people naked. Some of them even picked from the kids menu if you catch my drift.
