

People who hate ai for water and land resource usage can you please explain something?

Posted by u/FamiliarAura • 0 points • 46 comments

I know this will ruffle many feathers as it's an uncomfortable topic to cover, please be sure to read everything so you understand my post, but every time I see someone I know posting about how terrible people are for using AI, i get a little bit Frustrated, I absolutely am not an AI supporter, but it feels like pure hypocrisy that people speak out About how bad people are for using AI because of environmental damage, yet they actively ignore the environmental damage of animal agriculture. My question is, why are you passionate about ai water usage, but actively support meat and dairy which we know uses so much more water? One common thing people say is AI doesn't feed us, but it's a choice to eat meat and dairy, there are plenty alternatives, and dairy doesn't even need to be replaced, people choose to eat dairy for the flavor or convenience. You could compare animal agriculture and AI in the sense that we don't need to use AI to make art or answer questions, but it sure does make it easier. Just like we don't need meat or dairy to be fed, but it's more convenient and tasty. Is it something you never thought about? Would you consider it now, or with more research? Do you prefer to just denounce something (AI) so you don't have to put effort and change into your life (changing diet/lifestyle)? I just cannot understand it, and it's very hypocritical as AI eater usage is just a drop in the pond of animal agriculture, data slightly varies but there's no denying it. Another excuse people give is that you can't fully avoid animal products in our modern society (stuff in our phones, maybe medicine, etc) at the same time it's getting to the point where you can't avoid AI either, but just because you might not be able to 1000% cut out animal products, it doesn't make sense to not try at all if your passion is water and land conservation.

Comments

u/FlashyNeedleworker66 • 1 points • 2026-02-11 00:12 UTC

They don't actually care. They're just mad that computers can draw pictures. Everything else is dressing it up.

I run local models on a pc that's mine in a house run on solar. Nobody here considers that better. They're threatened that these programs exist at all.

They will happily tell you they eat meat but AI is bad for the environment. They will happily tell you they pirate movies and video games, but AI is theft.

If antis didn't have double standards they'd have no standards at all.

u/FamiliarAura • 1 points • 2026-02-25 00:32 UTC

Absolutely! I think the most frustrating thing in life right now is how aggressive people are about their double standards. I don't understand, but that's a good thing lol I would hate to ever understand double standards like that u/SwedishFindecator • 1 points • 2026-02-08 09:37 UTC

I believe it would be best best to keep a movement founded for one issue stay focused on that issue, and only that issue.

You will gather more supporters that way. There will always be people who agree with you on one issue, but not on others. Many people in the anti-AI community are people who hang around liberals or right-wingers, who simply just don't want to be seen as leftists through other people's eyes.

One of the biggest mistakes that Greta Thunberg did was to make her "Fridays for future" movement, originally protesting climate change also cover the Palestine issue. Not that it wasn't important. Not that I don't think that Greta herself should have got involved and leveraged her fame and influence, because she has of course all the right in the world to.

What she did only weakened "Fridays for future". Members left, and other people stopped listening.

(I'm saying this as a vegetarian and old climate activist who have marched for Palestine at an event organised by Greta Thunberg and also demo'd with PauseAI)

u/FamiliarAura • 0 points • 2026-02-25 00:27 UTC

I think you missed the point, my question is if you claim to care about land and water usage, but continue to support in agriculture you are a hypocrite by definition. And being an AI can only be seen as virtue signaling because you don't actually have to put effort into anything, it's all people sitting on their computers, making posts about it Resources, even running your TV is worse than asking ChatGPT questions. Never did say that people who are anti-AI should incorporate vegan into their posts about anti AI. But if someone claims to be anti AI for environmental reasons yet is still choosing to consume animal products for the flavor even though that's worse than AI, they don't actually care about land and water. They care about virtue signaling

u/dumnezezero • 1 points • 2026-02-08 07:28 UTC

>yet they actively ignore the environmental damage of animal agriculture

1. You can and should work on both. You can eat a plant-based diet AND boycott AI slopware.

2. Water is a limited resource that is already maxed out in many places. The addition of datacenters, much like the addition of irrigated feed crops, tips the situation into crisis.

u/FamiliarAura • 1 points • 2026-02-25 00:22 UTC

1. This is my point. If you think I'm promoting AI, you. Need to reread the post. Why do people "care" about water and land when it comes to AI but not when it comes to animal At which is thousands of times worse? 2. We could stop the crisis if people actually cared and stopped consuming animal products, but people don't want to put effort into making change. It's easier to virtue signal by saying AI is bad on Facebook while eating your McDonald's. You made two points and yet neither answered my question. Why virtue signal about caring about the environment while making choices that destroy it?

u/dumnezezero • 1 points • 2026-02-25 06:56 UTC

If you're criticizing the animal harming sector, but not the AI sector, you're defending the AI sector.

If you're criticizing the AI sector, but not the animal harming sector, you're defending the AH sector.

BOTH have to be criticized if you're using a critique based on environmental ethics. You failed to make that point, even if it sounded better in your head. Improve.

u/Tombobalomb • 2 points • 2026-02-08 04:49 UTC

Eating animals enriches my life, gen ai degrades it mostly

u/FamiliarAura • 1 points • 2026-02-08 05:07 UTC

And then at the same time, how is it that you guys see other people as horrible for using AI just because they like it, yet you participate in activities that are worse than AI just because you like it, like you recognize the hypocrisy, right?

u/Tombobalomb • 1 points • 2026-02-08 05:23 UTC

Because eating animals enriches my life and is therefore worth the cost. Ai doesn't and is not

u/FamiliarAura • 1 points • 2026-02-08 05:31 UTC

Why pretend to care then if you don't. Why pretend to be an activist? Just attention? lol there's just something so weird about aggressively anti ai people and these comments really help put it together lol, just lack of common sense and maturity 🤔 and education. Yall don't even care about your own cause lmao

u/FamiliarAura • 1 points • 2026-02-08 05:06 UTC

So yeah it's about what you gain and not about helping the environment? I figure it was just performative virtue signaling on top of hypocrisy, cause why else would people make posts about ai being bad for the environment while actively choosing to do worse things to the environment lol. Human greed is crazy, but why not just align with that? Why pretend to care? That's what I don't get. Is it just for points online? Or is it like a self righteous thing?

u/Tombobalomb • 1 points • 2026-02-08 05:19 UTC

Yeah you got it. The world exists for the sole purpose of benefiting humanity

u/FamiliarAura • 1 points • 2026-02-08 05:29 UTC

Yikes. Terrible mindset and that's why the earth is dying and why no one gets along to progress forward.

u/Tombobalomb • 1 points • 2026-02-08 05:31 UTC

Cry more

u/FamiliarAura • 1 points • 2026-02-08 05:44 UTC

Ooo you got me good 😂😂 you are so edgy and cool omgggg