Did you even read the whole thing? 🤔

u/Effective_Composer_5 • 1 points • 2026-02-25 04:03 UTC

no but how can you use character ai besides for gooning lol

u/SadKnowledge9336 • 1 points • 2026-02-25 04:57 UTC

That's the thing I do NOT use c.ai 🤔 🤔 lmao

It is the exact same thing as any other generative AI, but it does use smaller models than the bigger companies like Anthropic, Google, and OpenAI, which is why the roleplays start falling apart earlier than a larger model will.

There is a spectrum of harm and small language models are on the low end of the spectrum, same with locally run image models.

For what it's worth, if you gave up beef for a week, you would be covered for life in terms of water wastage. Yes, it really is that bad. So, if you want to use cAI and company, give up beef for a couple of weeks.

This is the actual answer. Was about to write this.

The thing is the water used for AI cannot be reused or go through the water cycle again to be usable while the water used for meat can

Data center cooling water does evaporate back into the atmosphere, that's why it's called evaporative cooling. Beef production is absolutely not cleaner than data centers. Water depletion from animal products is one of the most serious freshwater crises we're facing globally.

I assume they're using deepseek api but I've never used them so idk

c.ai is essentially chatgpt with a prompt to roleplay

AI does not use water anymore. This is a myth based on old technology. All new plants use D2C cooling, which is a closed loop system. More water is used in the employee toilets.

Why idiots keep thinking they do when it's been public knowledge for years is beyond me.

u/apersonhithere • 4 points • 2026-02-24 03:44 UTC

even still power consumption is a big problem, especially with the US (where lots of datacenters are) planning to majorly ramp up coal power generation in the coming years

u/Puzzleheaded-Rope808 • -1 points • 2026-02-24 09:41 UTC

OMG, tell me big energy controls how you think. Coal is dead. Renewable energy is cheaper, more efficient, and the fuel is free. Further, Datacenters use a fraction of the energy that they used to, and most have some form of renewable energy powering them out of necessity.

We have a power issue because the Trump administration has blocked renewable energy because it doesn't line his pockets, creating a power issue.

LoI, LITERALLY read my comment!!! There is no such thing as clean coal and never will be

u/apersonhithere • 1 points • 2026-02-24 20:00 UTC

i think you're missing the point;
power consumption will ESPECIALLY be a problem due to extra coal power plants

u/SadKnowledge9336 • 4 points • 2026-02-24 02:19 UTC

Im sorry but do you have any sources? The world health organization said that we are gonna start to run out of clean water in a few years because of AI

Lol, what???? The WHO or a Meme?

Stop believeing what you read on Reddit, especially in this group.

u/CryptographerKlutzy7 • 0 points • 2026-02-24 05:52 UTC

They did not. You saw a thing on reddit or facebook, and took it as real. It wasn't.

the WHO is clearly controlled by the woke mind virus /s
