

AI, data centres, surveillance and power

China is a surveillance state. Facial recognition and data mining. Predictive modelling of the population to an individualised level. Manipulation and conformity. They are rolling it all out during an economic boom, and people don't mind the lack of privacy. China feels safe. China has eradicated poverty. If you haven't committed a crime you have nothing to fear. Give it a generation, eh?

America is a surveillance state. Facial recognition and data mining. Predictive modelling of the population to an individualised level. Manipulation and extremism. They are rolling it out under the guise of racism and convenience, and people don't notice a lack of privacy. America feels free. America has eradicated dreams of socialism. If you aren't a foreigner you have nothing to fear. Give it a year, eh?

Europe wants to be a surveillance state. Facial recognition and data mining. Predictive modelling of the population to an individualised level. Manipulation and fear mongering. Shit, I could go on.

My point is, the cultures are all very different, but the goals all seem to be the same. Control. Consolidation of power in a really irreversible way. The death of privacy and agency of the common man. The end of choice and freedom. Whatever side you think you are on, you are likely involved in some kind of culture war. Left vs right, national vs immigrant, China vs the West. That is how this technology is getting adopted. We are very much allowing the wealthy and powerful to build a dystopian prison for the rest of population so they can squeeze us for the rest of time. It's the culture war to end the class war forever. In my opinion, this is the only conspiracy worth uncovering, and the most dangerous war of our times. It's dangerous because it's so close to becoming a reality the whole world over. It's dangerous because it's a system designed to surveil, predict, misinform, extremise manipulate, segregate and totally control us without recourse forever. It's dangerous because most people support it without knowing what it is. We need to uncover and attempt to stifle this. It's global, and it's organised.

Anyone got a breadcrumb for a brother?

Feels like this is where it all ends. A systematic dismantling of all checks, balances and opposition. I'm not sure there is any going back from data centres in space :')
