

r/antiai

is it true that the water ai uses gets cycled through the water cycle?

Posted by u/thegassiestpuglover • • 0 points • 37 comments

a common argument i hear from the pro-ai crowd to the "ai wastes water" argument is that the water cycle exists. is it true that the water cycle nullifies the water waste, and if so, how?

Comments

u/zeptillian • 1 points • 2026-03-24 22:39 UTC

All water gets cycled through the water cycle.

That doesn't mean there is an unlimited ammount we can use or that wasting it is acceptable.

u/JustMajestic1 • 1 points • 2026-03-24 22:25 UTC

The issue isn't the fact that the water eventually returns to the water cycle. It's the fact that so much water is needed to keep it running that it causes shortages for other people using the same infrastructure. The water may recycle, but there is a finite amount of available water for people to use in any given area.

u/Salindurthas • 1 points • 2026-03-22 23:52 UTC

It is true that it gets cycled, but that doesn't nullify it.

If I blow up all the dams in the world, that water remains as part of a water cycle, but it is still a problem in how much of that water is currently available for us to use.