

I've been somewhat addicted to using AI and I want to try to quit (I know it's bad for the environment, it makes you stupid, etc.), but the problem is that the AI comes pre-installed on the phone. Any advice on how to stop using AI?

Posted by u/Beautiful-Resort-831 • 0 points • 0 comments

My problem is that I'm very addicted to asking for instant answers, spontaneous thoughts, or telling someone something without considering their timing, and I know that's wrong. That's why I'm looking for help here, hoping for advice from other people who are also former AI addicts, because I have to admit that AI is more like a drug, and if you get too involved, it's hard to get off it.

Comments

u/Any_Plenty_8306 • 7 points • 2026-04-02 04:12 UTC

Been there man, the instant gratification thing is real. What worked for me was turning off all the AI assistant stuff in my phone settings and deleting any AI apps I'd downloaded. You can usually disable Siri/Google Assistant completely if you dig into the settings

The hardest part was breaking that reflex of just asking something instead of thinking it through first. Started carrying a small notebook to write down random thoughts instead of immediately asking an AI about them. Most of the time when I'd look back at what I wrote, I either figured out the answer myself or realized it wasn't that important anyway

Also found it helped to tell a few close friends what I was doing so they could call me out if I started reaching for my phone every time something came up in conversation

u/Beautiful-Resort-831 • 2 points • 2026-04-02 04:14 UTC

Basically, what I used to do with the AI was literally tell it about videos I watched and see if it would try to extract more information from somewhere. That's probably the hardest thing for me to forget because it was incredibly satisfying.

u/Lumi61 • 1 points • 2026-04-02 06:05 UTC

Open a chat with yourself on any message app and record voice messages where you tell about the movie like you would have told a friend or ai. The moment you talk out loud or write about something it becomes way more connected in your brain and you will end up with new theories and thoughts yourself. If you really want to discuss your output with someone, go to the fitting reddit section and see what the community has dug out about your movie. It's usually closer to the truth than AI and connects you to some real people with similar interests