

What effective way could help us to reduce all those bad AI infestations in products, corporate greed, environment destruction, media, plagiarizing etc. while still NOT shutting down every single AI usage, including actually helpful ways, like some Anti-AI bro?

Posted by u/MCligmaMC • • 0 points • 5 comments

Let me state that I'm trying to NOT be a Pro NOR Anti AI bro as the interned has become divided into. But after so much plague and misusing people, what can we do to reduce such plague? I mean, I've seen one actually great comment on Twitter stated how "we could use AI to help people walk again, and instead we use it for a profit and gain" something in this sense.

Yes, I'm aware of how AI usage is from majority done wrong, but the key is not to angrily take down everything influenced by AI. It is to be in the right hands more than the wrong ones. Even we should judge HOW AI was implemented/used, not IF it was implemented/used.

Comments

u/thenissancube • 1 points • 2026-01-21 20:37 UTC

Ask yourself if the conveniences AI affords you are ACTUALLY worth the risk it poses. It has been around for a relatively short amount of time and in that span it has offered completely incorrect information, encouraged users to commit suicide, spread rampant misinformation, and is now being used to make fake nudes of real people.

And what are the overwhelming positives? What amazing things has it done for us? It's made some really ads and shitty album covers and summarized things for people who can't read.

u/sceadwian • 1 points • 2026-01-21 20:33 UTC

Fix the geopolitical climate that has created the conditions that lead us here.

You should immediately see the problem is bigger than can be tackled in any kind of immediate or task specific recommendations.

The fundamental structure of our society has allowed this to occur, there's no easy way to fix that.

u/Jazzlike-Money3140 • 1 points • 2026-01-21 17:48 UTC

Honestly the biggest thing would probably be better regulation and transparency requirements - like companies having to clearly label when they're using AI and for what purpose. Most people don't even realize half the stuff they interact with is AI-powered these days u/MCligmaMC • 1 points • 2026-01-21 18:00 UTC

Understand you. I've seen for example the more recent song from Linkin Park - Lost, that indeed involved AI use, however in a way that doesn't plagiarize from unsuspecting creators outside of project. Instead, it used artwork directly donated from people in the brand (or company? whatever) that were in and allowed their art to be used this way. The song creators made it clear. This right here, is the goated example of using AI just fine.

u/GyantSpyder • 1 points • 2026-01-21 17:48 UTC

You need to define who "us" is. There is no broad "us." Human groups top out at 150 people, anything bigger is a coalition of groups of groups.

So which group of 150 people or fewer are you talking about when you say "us," and what sorts of coalitions or mutual agreements do you believe are necessary to get to larger alignment on the issue?