

AI companies will war for the narrative on water

Posted by u/jaejaeok • 0 points • 3 comments

As the AI arms race continues, these companies are getting called out for their impact on local community water.

The government is clear we don't have the infra for the demand data centers pose. Community resident stories have highlighted that water slows or becomes unusually "murky." And the AI companies are slowly ramping the counter narrative: "Data centers don't *really* take much water. In fact, you scrolling requires 10x more water!"

Whoever owns the leading narrative on water is well positioned to abuse it.

I always thought it was funny that Michael Burry swung so aggressively to water after his famous hedge. I didn't realize how deep the water thing goes - even beating AI. You can watch "The Grab" water documentary which had my jaw open the entire time.

Yep it's fucking absurd how much resources are being thrown at this crap. Wealth should not be the principle force driving society but here we are, with plenty of temporarily embarrassed millionaires ready to defend the system which preys on them

This needs more attention. There are so many concerning things about the implications of AGI/AI in general. This doesn't get nearly enough.
