

Are there any AI chatbots as good as ChatGPT but better for the environment?

Posted by u/Background-Tree6593 • • 0 points • 0 comments

I'm in a really crazy time of my life right now where there's a lot to figure out. I'm poor, trying to get my GED, and also a tiny shove away from homelessness. I used to use ChatGPT to help plan, give me ideas, and structure my life a little. I don't take anything it says at face value, I always double check what it tells me by doing my own research, it just puts me onto what to actually research for that specific thing. For example, it helped me find college grants in my state that I never would've found on my own. It's a really good tool for planning and organizing my life, especially in a time right now where the wrong life decisions could really fuck me over forever.

On the other hand, I stopped using it a few months ago because I found out about the environmental impact (especially on poor neighborhoods which directly affects people like me), not to mention I just don't think what it's doing to the world and our media is ethical in any way. I've been non-stop asking for advice on Reddit and stuff, a lot of the time I don't get very useful answers though. Sometimes I do definitely, there's just more specifics in my situation that are harder to explain to random people on the internet. Just trying to see if there's a powerful AI out there that isn't bad for the environment, it'd help a lot.

Comments