Just wondering. There's a lot of people here that seem to ignore the facts.

Yes. Specifically to make you angry.

Scum :)

Is there a reason why you get into a car and drive to a park, or to visit a relative, even though driving puts lives at risk (including your own), pollutes, and wastes resources?

Obviously, this is an incredibly loaded question, and I suspect your mind is already made up. But if you are genuinely curious about other people's perspectives: my sincere hope is that AI will assist humanity by helping develop strategies, systems, and materials that ultimately are a huge net-benefit to the environment and society. We are in the development phase, and yes, there is plenty of processing power spent on generations that don't seem to be aligned with that, but to me that is the superfluous "comet's tail", not the central nucleus itself, which has an important trajectory it is traversing.

It's not necessary.

Is there a reason why you continue to waste natural resources and harm communities by staring at your screen and spreading hatred every day?

Better than contributing to something that makes child sexual abuse material :)

u/Reidinski • 1 points • 2026-01-03 07:37 UTC

No, no it isn't.

Just keep telling on yourself.

Hey man, I understand where you're coming from and you're not overreacting— you're human. However, I want to stay grounded here and emphasize something, but first, let's go over grounding techniques using the 5 senses.

Name:

5 things you see

4 things you feel

3 things you hear

2 things you smell

1 thing you taste

And quit being a sissy
